

INCIDENTS OF THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO CHICKAMAUGA PARK

Enthusiastic Reception Accorded by Troopers of Seventh Cavalry.

TOLD BY CAMERA AND PEN

Mr. Roosevelt's Dashing Ride at the Head of Horsemen—Vociferously Cheered for Expression of Confidence in Regulars—Battlefields Viewed From Lookout Mountain.

By J. K. S.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S visit to the Seventh Cavalry camp at Chickamauga on Sunday last will go down in army annals as one of the brightest spots in the memory of the men of that command. Every trooper, schooled daily in the hearty, aggressive type of Americanism, is bound to feel henceforth a lotter pride in his country and a greater confidence in its continued welfare, because of the inspiring meeting with the Chief Magistrate of the Nation on that bright, warm September day.

Though the recent Southern tour of the President, ended only on Wednesday last, had as its chief point Mr. Roosevelt's presence at the convention of Locomotive Firemen at Chattanooga, the favorable opportunity of inspecting one of the crack cavalry regiments of the American Army was not to be overlooked. Cavalryman himself, veteran of the same war, comrade of the men who had trooped out to honor him on his visit, it was little wonder that the President entered heartily into the enjoyment of the day at Chickamauga—little wonder, too, that his aggressive personality should have impressed itself on every soldier in the camp and fired their blood with added enthusiasm for their flag and country.

The rendezvous was fixed for the end of the trail road from Chattanooga to chested horse had been provided for the President. The equine seemed impressed with his own important part in the day's program when led up for his distinguished rider to mount. A prance, a ling in an excess of energy. In this position the President is represented in the picture on this page, just after he had mounted the horse.

The cavalcade was ready to move. The President's horse stood on a part of the road slightly higher than where the long line of troopers stretched out to the edge of the hill and beyond. At the head of that line sat the officers of the foremost troop, splendid specimens of the soldier, with the troop guidons fluttering all down the line back of them and the horsemen drawn up so compactly as to suggest the famous painting, "The Conquerors." General Boynton was in the saddle; Colonel Baldwin, commander of the Seventh, rode up; Captain Mercer, of the leading troop, saluted, and the President led off.

A Gallop to Remember.

The route to the camp, three miles and a half distant, followed the park roads. The President kept to the road and cut out a splendid pace. The troopers did so, too, as well as they could. Sometimes they kept on the road and sometimes when it turned—they did not, and found themselves out of column in an instant. But they all rode well, or they never would have kept up at all. To their own credit it must be said that though the dust completely obscured the way and almost blinded them, they were nearly all in place at the finish.

A few men were unhorsed when their steeds were wedged out of the procession at some short turn and tangled them in the lower branches of the young saplings which cover the greater part of the Chickamauga plain. Many others rode hatless in the review before the President. But this slight departure from perfection only emphasized the great number of others who followed the President in one of the most trying rides they had probably ever experienced in their life as soldiers.

After the inspection and review on the parade ground, the exhibition of physical perfection given by the troopers in the Butts' manual of calisthenics, proved very impressive. The long line comprised twelve full troops, swaying to the music of the cavalry band, without a single word of command or instruction from any officer. To one side, to the other, upward, and then downward, the five hundred troopers lars," was one of his brief comments. What the troopers thought of that sentiment is shown, in one of the pictures here, better than words can express.

General Boynton's Battle Story.

The drive through the park led past Lytle station, the place where all the thousands of green volunteers were embarked in '98, to the Snodgrass Hill observation tower, ninety feet high. There, high above the tree-tops, was taken the picture of the President and General Boynton, as the latter was describing to Mr. Roosevelt the great campaign and the two-days' battle on the ground at their feet.

went through every exercise as if arms and feet and bodies were impelled, this way and that, by some great connecting shaft with perfect mechanism.

When Mr. Roosevelt Spoke.

At Mr. Roosevelt's request a brief religious service was conducted by the chaplain of the regiment. Assembled in columns of troops at the foot of the huge flagpole, the troopers stood shoulder to shoulder and sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." The President joined heartily. Then, as shown in one of the pictures here, he stepped forward with Colonel Baldwin at his side and spoke to the soldiers in a voice clear enough to be heard at a great distance.

All the troopers within sight listened

General Boynton pointed out where Rosecrans had been, and where Thomas gained lasting fame as the "Rock of Chickamauga" in the fiercest kind of fighting, and the President knew where the modest gray-bearded veteran himself had been.

At "The Battle Above the Clouds."

Returning from Chickamauga by carriage, viewing the scenes of the fighting along Missionary Ridge, and visiting the site of Grant's headquarters at Orchard Knob, the trip up Lookout Mountain was made. The inclined railway at its upper part runs almost perpendicularly.

Preferring to walk the few hundred yards on the top of the mountain, down to Lookout Point, the President led the intently to the President's words. They found that he was one of them when he told them that some of their officers had served in his regiment in the Spanish war, and that under others of them he had served. He did not speak long, but his remarks were characteristically pointed.

"As you know, I swear by the regu-way, with General Boynton, Secretary Cortelyou and Governor McMillan, of Tennessee. As they were standing at the extreme point of the mountain, where the country beyond is 900 feet below that level, was taken the picture here reproduced of this distinguished group of the principal figures in the day's proceedings.

Leave of absence for three months is granted First Lieut. Sylvester Bonaffon III, Fourth Infantry, to take effect De-Trial of the Wyoming Postponed.

The Union Iron Works of San Francisco notified the Navy Department several days ago that the monitor Wyoming was nearly ready for her first trial and asked that the test take place about September 22. After considering the request Secretary Moody has decided that more time should be given within which to get the ship ready for trial, and it will not be held until about the 15th of October.

Trials of Torpedo Boat Destroyers.

A report has been received at the Navy Department regarding the endurance test of the torpedo boat destroyers Bainbridge and Worden, which took place over the Buxton Island course in the Chesapeake Bay. Although the trial was not for speed, the Worden made 30.05 knots an hour, exceeding the required speed of 29 knots. The Bainbridge is required to make 29 knots, and in the trial yesterday made 28 1/2 knots. A speed trial run over the same course will be held later.

Bedwear.

Months ago, when the makers were a-begging, immense orders were given by the Palais Royal representative. Prices here today are less than the quotations in the wholesale market. Not in all instances, but in many. Learn of these not-to-be-repeated bargains, and profit by them in time. The time will be short, for hotel men and boarding-house proprietors are buying in large quantities.

88c pair for best $1.25 value 11-4 English Fleece Blankets. And 88c for full-sized Comforts, filled with laminated cotton and covered with best silkoline.
$1.69 pair for best $2.25 value Scotch Wool Blankets—those extra heavy, sturdy fellows, that last a lifetime.
